Iliff’s Master of Theological Studies (MTS) degree offers you the flexibility to combine a study of theology, biblical studies, ethics, sociology, philosophy, religious studies, social change and a variety of other offerings into an integrated plan of study. The MTS is designed for those who would like to increase their personal understanding, to enhance and existing career path, or prepare for a doctoral degree.
Iliff’s flexible curriculum allows you the opportunity to customize courses to fit your goals. The MTS allows for study of a wide range of topics including:

- Comparative Religious Traditions
- Constructive Theology
- Ethics
- Exploration of Religious Traditions
- Historical Development
- Sacred Texts

The MTS program is a 72 quarter credit hour degree intended for your academic interests in interdisciplinary studies. It is an appropriate pre-doctoral program and provides a broad background in theological and religious studies, and a thesis project. The curriculum includes study in an area of concentration, required courses to ensure breadth of religious and theological backgrounds, and the development and writing of a thesis.

Upon completion of a required number of courses, your MTS Program culminates in an interdisciplinary thesis, which is intended to be a focused, article-length original piece of academic research demonstrating your ability to work across two or more identifiable disciplines.

As an accredited institution, financial aid is available to all who qualify.

The MTS draws on a broad variety of courses that are available in residential, intensive, hybrid and online formats. MTS required courses are offered online and students may complete the MTS program completely via distance (noting that all elective courses may not be offered online).
